To Whom it may Concern

The University of Wales received its Royal Charter in 1893 and is a fully recognised University of the United Kingdom. University of Wales awards carry full recognition and validity in accordance with the relevant laws of the United Kingdom. This qualification is awarded under the terms of the University's Royal Charter.

This is to certify that qualifications awarded by the University of Wales at Magna Carta College, Oxford is set within the Framework for Higher Education Qualifications (FHEQ) in England, Wales and Northern Ireland and the Credit and Qualifications Framework for Wales (CQFW).

Students pursuing University of Wales awards do so under strictly controlled academic conditions. They are enrolled as students of the University of Wales; they follow a course of study validated and approved by the University of Wales; they are assessed and examined under the University's Regulations and Academic Protocols and their work is subject to the scrutiny of external examiners appointed by the University of Wales. The qualification awarded to students studying on such schemes is a full and legitimate award of the University of Wales.
